

EXT. ICE SHELF - NIGHT

An EXCAVATION TEAM carves into the ice with thermal lasers. Work lights on stands illuminate the site. Their technology is somewhat futuristic.

MICHAEL (20s) leaves an equipment tent. He holds two bottles of COCA-COLA. He tosses a bottle to RICK (50s).

MICHAEL

You're sure he's down there?

RICK

I'm positive.

The drill team digs as far as they can. Rick motions for them to lift. A crane raises a block of ice.

Rick steps closer. He sees a CAVEMAN (30s) has been perfectly preserved. He's excited.

EXT. ICE SHELF - LATER

Michael and Rick watch the ice block melt away. Machines have been set up to face and point heat directly on it.

INT. TENT - LATER

The caveman, now out of the ice, lays on a table. Michael and Rick stand close with TEAM MEMBERS.

Caveman stirs and breathes heavily. His throat dry. He leaps off of the table and grunts at the team. Startled, they back away to give him space. Michael stays put.

MICHAEL

(sympathetic)

He's been under there for so long.

Caveman fixates on the Coca-Cola held by Rick. The liquid drawing him in. Caveman motions for the drink.

MICHAEL

I think he wants it.

Rick gives Michael a "are you insane?" look. He relents and hands Caveman the Coca-Cola bottle.

Caveman snatches the bottle out of his hand and gulps it down. He reaches his hand out to ask for another.

RICK

Hey, look. He likes it.

Michael opens a cooler and pulls out three Coca-Cola bottles. He tosses one to Caveman and Rick.

The men drink. A smile spreads across Caveman's face.
